Finn is only eighteen years old. He does not look more than sixteen. He is small and undeveloped and has the clean-cut face of a mere boy. According to the police, however, he fits the description of the man who has been terrorising the women ticket agents of the B. R. T.

Later Finn was arraigned before Mag-refusing to grant the application for new primaries in four Brooklyn Assem-bly districts. The applications were based mainly on the fact that in the distribution of primary ballots a num-ber of polling places were neglected and the vote was consequently much smaller than it should have been. Justice Maddox held that in order to have a new primary charges of fraud in the original primary must be sub-stantiated. No fraud was charged in the applications before him, he said, and error in distributing ballots did not constitute sufficient cause for the
